TECHNOLOGY, TRENDS AND TRANSITIONS

Exploring the current and emerging applications of technology that promote the health and independence of older adults

PRESENTED BY

The University Center on Aging and Health, the Frances Payne Bolton School of Nursing and the Western Reserve Geriatric Education Center at Case Western Reserve University

Join health care practitioners and educators, health care administrators, engineers and technology specialists, formal and informal caregivers, policy makers and other thought leaders at a daylong event examining:

- Health care technology designed to help older adults continue to live independently
- Public policy and ethical issues relating to these technological advances
- Emerging trends in technology—including specific products—and their relevance to an aging population

ABOUT FLORENCE CELLAR

Florence Cellar earned her Master of Nursing degree from the Frances Payne Bolton School of Nursing at Case Western Reserve University in 1938. After a nearly 40-year career at University Hospitals, she went on to establish the Florence Cellar Professor in Gerontological Nursing—the country's first chair in gerontological nursing and the first fully endowed professorship at the nursing school.
